

Chris is an insightful, collaborative executive coach, and consultant who makes strategy happen. He brings over 20 years of business experience to help you get the most from your individual and organizational performance.

Chris has skillfully played a broad range of leadership roles including domestic and international business development, marketing, operations, sales force management, store development, as well as real estate and project management. Chris is known for his exceptional strategic planning skills, dedicated and passionate leadership style, and his ability to translate vision into well-executed strategies that produce results.

With a focus on increased self-awareness, authentic communication, and clarity of purpose, Chris knows how to transform the leadership conversation and build stronger, more capable leaders. Chris also provides training on the topic of unconscious bias. Certified by the Berkeley Executive Coaching Institute, nothing energizes Chris more than working in partnership toward new possibilities, challenging you to be your best.

When he's not working with you on your journey to learn and grow, Chris is outdoors. On the water or in the mountains, he enjoys everything that nature has to offer. He loves the challenge of a long-distance outrigger race, the grind of a three-hour mountain bike ride, or the solitude of time on the river with his fly rod.